

Don't Eat Yellow Snow

Since we have been in school a little while, I have noticed some things that I would like to point out to my peers. Not to offend anybody, because here at Heard County High School everyone is a winner, but there are a few subjects that need to be known by everyone.

Smelly students: There are some people around here that need to take a shower or wash their clothes. I hate going into a class and gagging because the people before me went in there without taking a shower for two weeks. This is not attractive in any way. I could understand if your water went out last week, but use a family member or friend's shower. I am sure they will let you after smelling that nastiness. I am not saying that I smell like roses every minute of every day, but I definitely take care of myself and care about myself enough to take a bath. Some students have weight training, which is understandable that you smell during that class, but I know multiple guys that use the showers down there that are provided for that very reason. A little deodorant can go a long way if people would just use it. Every student at this school has some B.O. at one point in their life, but if you do not do anything about it, then that is a completely different story.

Boys who gossip: I have noticed that a lot of guys are starting this thing called gossip. Gossip has always been looked upon as girl territory, but now guys are picking up this awful habit. I, for one, do not consider myself as a person who talks about people. I have an opinion that I will express, but I do not sit there and talk about just random people. Guys now probably talk about people equal or almost as much as girls. There is a difference in stating your opinion and just going on and on about this guy or girl you hate in your third block. Everyone has gossiped one time or another in their lifetime, so no one can say that they have not, but guys, to me, seem to be in this phase to a greater degree lately. Granted, girls have and probably always will gossip, but guys are not too far behind them.

Over dressed: I do not see anything wrong with trying to look pretty for school. Maybe you like to dress up and maybe you like this boy that sits at your lunch table, but going too far is not attractive in the least bit. Having orange faces and having a different hair color is, in my opinion, going too far with it. I admit, there are days where I hate the color of my hair and the shade of my skin, but on the other hand, I am not going to make myself fake just to impress someone or even myself. I think that everyone has their own prettiness about them. Everyone has some things that are unique about them. Do not try to hide that behind globs of eyeliner and mounts of blush. Most guys do not even like girls to wear make up anyways. On rainy days, wear your hair up in a pony tail; it will not kill you to put the curling iron down for one day. I am not saying come to school in some sweats every day, because I do not even do that and I do not think that is attractive either, but you do not have to wake up two hours early just to get ready. That is just dumb. I think that a lot of girls are pretty at this school, so no one has to hide behind a mask. Just be yourself.
