With May 21, coming up, the seniors have one thing on their mind: graduation. Some seniors may be dreading this special day due to the uncertainty of graduating, but others are anxious to get their diploma and get out of here. Ready or not, school is coming to its final days and soon the seniors of 2010 will be forced to face the outside world. For the last four years of our lives, we have had many laughs, jokes, and tears, but when you get that piece of paper with your name on it, you'll be glad to know it is finally over.

My advice column is a little bit different this time. I cannot sit here and tell you what the world will be like, because I haven't explored it myself, but what I can tell you is that it will be hard and stressful, but will also be the best times of your life. You will be in your prime, experiencing new things, and meeting people that will change your life forever. For those going to college, do your best to stay in college. College is not for everyone, but you will never know if you never try. College is a serious thing. It is the door that is between you and your career and future. I am sure it will be a fun experience for you, but you have to take into consideration that you will probably never get anywhere in life with just partying every second.

High school memories will last a lifetime and you need to be thinking about all of them with the last days approaching. Heal those friendships that use to be there, but got messed up somewhere along the journey. Thank your teachers for having the patience to deal with all of us for four years and teaching you things you would have never known otherwise. Keep in touch with some people after we graduate and let them know that those people really did make a difference in your life.

To the class of 2010, no one said that life will be easy, but it sure will be a ride. I hope that all of you succeed in what you really want in life and never let anyone tell you that you cannot. Whether people look at you as a smart person or unintelligent, you can always fulfill your life dreams. When you think you cannot go on, there is always a peak where there is a valley. You will make friendships and lose friendships. Fall down hard on your face, but get up and make it through and it will make you stronger. Live everyday like it was your last and never be afraid to go for what you want. You will have your good and bad days and life will not always seem perfect, but that is no excuse to quit and fail. It will be a struggle, but, in my opinion, God does not give us more than we can handle. I hope you all go out and have the times of your lives. Farewell seniors of 2010.
